In 1806 William Thornhill, an illiterate English bargeman and a man of quick temper but deep compassion, steals a load of wood and, as a part of his lenient sentence, is deported, along with his beloved wife, Sal, to the New South Wales colony in what would become Australia. The Secret River is the tale of William and Sal’s deep love for their small, exotic corner of the new world, and William’s gradual realization that if he wants to make a home for his family, he must forcibly take the land from the people who came before him. Acclaimed around the world, The Secret River is a magnificent, transporting work of historical fiction.

What a surprisingly beautiful masterpiece this book turned out to be for me! Such rich descriptions of landscapes and emotions fill its pages; nearly every sentence is crammed with accomplishment, so that I was continually surprised by the newness of an idea or phrase. I loved this book, which was made even more real by the fact that I live on an acreage on the Hawkesbury. Kate Grenville has captured its spirituality perfectly; how it gets into one’s bones and ties one to it forever, despite isolation and some minor hardships (these days). Our piece of Oz was untouched by Europeans when we purchased it years ago, and like William Thornhill we carefully cleared a spot for our home. I must say that when my now grown children once ran barefoot and wild along its shores, pointing out Aboriginal middens almost washed away by rising tides, I felt a twinge of regret for the loss of what had been. If I could feel a twinge, separated by almost 200 years from the original landowners, then how much worse would it have been for Thornhill who lived uneasily in peace beside these people of the secret river for a while? To me, Grenville describes with such authority and accuracy how Thornhills gain would have also felt like a loss. Bravo to a great novelist.
